The memory of R. W. Comer will be a benediction to other generations, as it is a blessing to those who were in contact with him While he sojourned on the earth.

Although Brother Comer was a successful businessman and had large interest in the affairs of the business world, yet he did not let earthly possessions claim his entire attention; he found time daily to do something for the Lord's work. In the last years of his life he preached the gospel and wrote and distributed tracts on Bible topics. He was busy encouraging others to serve the Lord. The writer was blessed by having him present in meetings in Kentucky. He was interested in the people of his native state and his home county; he wanted them to hear the gospel, and he was ready and willing to give time and money to have the gospel preached to them. Many churches in south Kentucky have been blessed by the services and sacrifices of R. W. Comer. There are many who can rise up and call him blessed because of the interest that he has taken in their spiritual welfare. We shall not see his like in our generation. The writer knows of no man who has done more for the progress of the cause of Christ in this generation than has R. W. Comer. No wonder thousands join us in mourning his passing.

“A GREAT MAN HAS FALLEN”

BY: H. LEO BOLES

When David learned of the death of Abner, he said: "Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?" (2 Sam. 3:38.) This statement of David has been used many times when applied to other great men, but it is truly applicable to R. W. Comer. He was "great" in many ways—he was great in his modesty and humility; he was great in his love for the church of our Lord; he was great as a servant of Christ and his fellow man; he was great in his liberality to the cause of Christ; he was great as a friend to man; he was great as a businessman; and he was great as a Christian gentleman. The writer has known but few, if any, who were as great in the private walks of life as R. W. Comer. His influence for God has been felt by thousands who have never met him face to face. He sent out literature that instructed people of Christ and persuaded them to live a better life. Many who read the books, papers, tracts, and leaflets which were paid for and distributed by Brother Comer never knew the good life that was back of the distribution of them.

It is known by nearly all the disciples of Christ in Nashville that R. W. Comer was responsible for the establishment of the Chapel Avenue Church, in East Nashville. This church is now one of the outstanding monuments of the work, sacrifice, and service of Brother Comer. Perhaps everyone of the more than five hundred members of the congregation there have already said since his passing that he had more to do with the establishment, growth, and work of the church than any other member. If he had done nothing more than to establish this great church and foster its growth, his life would have been a success. However, there are many other outstanding works that Brother Comer fostered that are too numerous to mention. He has been a leading figure in the work of the Lord among the churches of Christ in Nashville for more than a quarter of a century. As a member of the board of directors of David Lipscomb College, he served for more than a dozen years with efficiency and contributed thousands of dollars to the support of that institution; he has encouraged Freed-Hardeman College with his liberality; he has established other congregations and strengthened many others. He served as an elder of Russell Street Church, Nashville, Tenn., for a number of years, and moved his membership from Russell Street Church when he established Chapel Avenue Church. He was made one of the elders of Chapel Avenue Church and continued to serve in that capacity so long as he lived. The churches in Nashville will miss the wise counsel, liberality, and example of Brother Comer.

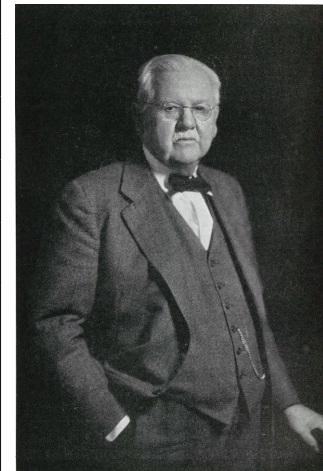

Nothing needs to be said here of his success as a businessman. He built up one of the largest businesses in Nashville, and thousands have reason to be grateful to him for the opportunity that he has given to them. He had associated with him, both in the business capacity and in the Lord's work, some men who have supplemented his work in a fine way. The elders and deacons of Chapel Avenue Church, together with many others, have cooperated with him and helped him in accomplishing the great work that he has done. It is good to know that his sons, Mont and Guy, are determined to carry on as best they can the work that their father has so well done.
